EPH-International Journal of Business & Management Science

ANCIENT WISDOM, MODERN MIND: SYNTHESIZING EMOTIONAL INTELLIGENCE CONSTRUCTS ACROSS THE VEDAS, UPANISHADS, AND BHAGAVAD GITA

Dr Rajul Bhardwaj

Associate Professor, NSB Academy, Bengaluru, Karnatak, India. rajul_bhardwaj@rediffmail.com

Article History
Received : 2026-07-29
Revised : 2026-09-27
Accepted : 2026-10-15
Published : 2026-10-31

Abstract
Emotional Intelligence (EI) has emerged as a cornerstone construct in modern psychology, detailing how individuals perceive, regulate, and leverage affect to foster personal, interpersonal, and professional success. However, contemporary EI literature remains predominantly grounded in Western secular paradigms, often overlooking the profound psychological frameworks embedded within ancient Eastern traditions. This study bridges this domain gap by conducting a systematic comparative synthesis of modern EI constructs—specifically self-awareness, self-regulation, empathy, social skills, and intrinsic motivation—across three foundational pillars of ancient Indian literature: the Vedas, Upanishads, and Bhagavad Gita. Through textual and thematic analysis, the paper demonstrates how the Vedas construct an emotional vocabulary centered on cosmic alignment (Rita) and ritualistic catharsis; how the Upanishads advance emotional equanimity (Samatva) through inner self-inquiry (Atma-Vichara), witness consciousness (Sakshi), and non-attachment (Vairagya); and how the Bhagavad Gita operationalizes EI under severe crisis through Karma Yoga (disinterested action) and Arjuna's psychological transformation. By synthesizing ancient textual insights with contemporary psychological models (e.g., Salovey & Mayer; Goleman), this paper establishes key conceptual parallels and philosophical distinctions. The findings offer a transcultural model of emotional governance with direct applications for executive leadership, stress resilience, and education, demonstrating that ancient spiritual wisdom provides a sophisticated, enduring blueprint for the modern mind.

Keywords: Emotional Intelligence; Ancient Indian Scriptures; Bhagavad Gita; Upanishads; Vedas; Sakshi Consciousness; Karma Yoga; Transcultural Psychology; Self-Regulation.

Vol. 12 Issue 6s (October, 2026)
ISSN:2208-2190 Pages- 192-196
DOI: https://doi.org/10.69980/7qvptd32

1. INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background and context

Emotional Intelligence (EI), formally introduced into contemporary psychological discourse by Peter Salovey and John D. Mayer in the early 1990s and subsequently popularized by Daniel Goleman, represents a critical evolutionary shift in our understanding of human competence. Defined as the ability to perceive, appraise, manage, and utilize emotions effectively in oneself and others, EI has established itself as a primary predictor of psychological well-being, executive leadership efficacy, social cohesion, and adaptive coping mechanisms under stress. Despite its widespread adoption across organizational, educational, and clinical domains, contemporary EI research remains heavily anchored in Western, individualistic, and secular paradigms. Consequently, mainstream psychological literature frequently ignores the rich, centuries-old traditions of Eastern philosophical systems that systematically explored the human psyche, affective states, and emotional regulation long before the advent of modern empirical psychology.

1.2 Scriptural Foundations as Epistemic Sources

The ancient scriptures of India—most notably the Vedas, the Upanishads, and the Bhagavad Gita—represent an unparalleled repository of psychological, ethical, and metaphysical inquiry. Far from being restricted to metaphysical dogma, these foundational texts provide sophisticated models of consciousness, affective processing, and behavioral governance. The Vedas establish the foundational vocabulary of human emotion and cosmic harmony (Rita); the Upanishads execute a deep cognitive turn toward inner self-inquiry (Atma-Vichara) and the cultivation of an unshakeable witness consciousness (Sakshi); and the Bhagavad Gita delivers a pragmatic framework for crisis management, cognitive reframing, and selfless action (Karma Yoga).

1.3 Objectives of the Study

To address the existing domain gap in transcultural psychological literature, this study fulfills three primary research objectives:

1. To deconstruct and categorize the portrayal of emotions, affective vocabulary, and emotional states within the Vedas, Upanishads, and Bhagavad Gita.
2. To systematically map the core components of modern EI (self-awareness, self-regulation, empathy, social skills, and motivation) onto ancient scriptural constructs.
3. To synthesize these ancient frameworks with modern cognitive-behavioral principles and demonstrate their practical utility in contemporary leadership, executive management, and education.

1.4 Scope and Methodological Limitations

The analytical scope of this research is intentionally restricted to the canonical texts of the Vedic tradition (Vedas, Upanishads, and the Bhagavad Gita). Methodological limitations include the inherent complexity of translating classical Sanskrit terminology into Western psychological nomenclature, as well as navigating varying hermeneutic interpretations across different philosophical schools (e.g., Advaita Vedanta vs. Samkhya). To ensure analytical rigor, this paper relies on cross-referenced, standard scholarly translations alongside established comparative psychological frameworks.

2. THEORETICAL & CONCEPTUAL FRAMEWORK

2.1 Modern Emotional Intelligence Frameworks

In contemporary psychology, EI is predominantly conceptualized through two distinct models: the Ability Model (Salovey & Mayer, 2004) and the Mixed/Competency Model (Goleman, 1995, 1998; Bar-On, 2006). Goleman's model delineates five core domain competencies:

- Self-Awareness: Introspective recognition of one's emotional states, values, and cognitive biases.
- Self-Regulation: The capacity to control disruptive impulses, manage stress, and maintain adaptability.
- Empathy: The ability to comprehend and vicariously experience the emotional perspectives of others.
- Social Skills: Proficiency in interpersonal influence, conflict resolution, communication, and collaboration.
- Intrinsic Motivation: Internal passion and drive to pursue goals beyond external material rewards.

2.2 Eastern Philosophical Perspectives on Affect

Unlike the binary classification common in classical Western psychology (where emotions are strictly segmented into positive vs. negative), the Indian philosophical paradigm views affect as a dynamic continuum

Vol. 12 Issue 6s (October, 2026)
ISSN:2208-2190 Pages- 192-196
DOI: https://doi.org/10.69980/7qvptd32

deeply intertwined with spiritual evolution and cognitive clarity. Emotions are evaluated based on their impact on individual harmony (Sattva), active passion (Rajas), or inertia/delusion (Tamas). Negative emotional states such as anger (Krodha), attachment (Raga), and aversion (Dvesha) are not viewed merely as dysfunctions, but as valuable diagnostic signals for self-reflection and inner transformation.

3. SYNTHESIS OF SCRIPTURAL CONSTRUCTS ACROSS TEXTUAL PILLARS

3.1 The Vedas: Ritualistic Expression, Vocabulary, and Cosmic Order

The Vedas represent the earliest textual layer of Indian thought. Beyond their liturgical dimensions, Vedic hymns express a sophisticated emotional vocabulary encompassing awe (Bhakti), gratitude (Kratagni), determination (Utsaha), and serene peace (Shanti). Furthermore, Vedic rituals served a vital psychological function: providing a structured, community-sanctioned medium for emotional expression, catharsis, and alignment with Rita—the cosmic law of order and harmony. Through communal ritual, individual emotional distress was transmuted into collective equilibrium.

3.2 The Upanishads: The Inner Journey, Sakshi, and Vairagya

The Upanishads shift the locus of inquiry from external ritual to internal consciousness. They establish the concept of Sakshi (Witness Consciousness)—the ability of the individual to observe mental and emotional fluctuations without becoming entangled in or reactive to them. By cultivating Vairagya (dispassion or non-attachment) and Samatva (equanimity amidst dualities like pleasure and pain), the Upanishadic teachings provide an introspective toolkit that directly mirrors modern mindfulness-based cognitive therapy (MBCT) and metacognition.

3.3 The Bhagavad Gita: Emotional Intelligence in Action

The Bhagavad Gita presents a real-time case study of severe acute psychological distress and cognitive paralysis. Set on the battlefield of Kurukshetra, Arjuna experiences intense anxiety, moral confusion, and emotional collapse. Lord Krishna's intervention serves as a masterclass in dynamic emotional regulation. Through the doctrine of Karma Yoga (Nishkama Karma—performing duty without attachment to outcomes), Krishna instructs Arjuna on decoupling effort from anxiety over results. This reframing restores Arjuna's emotional resilience, mental clarity, and executive decisiveness.

Table 1: Comparative Mapping of Modern EI Constructs and Ancient Scriptural Concepts

Modern EI Construct	Scriptural Parallel / Concept	Philosophical & Operational Mechanism
Self-Awareness	Atma-Vichara & Sakshi (Witnessing)	Introspective self-inquiry in the Upanishads allowing non-judgmental observation of internal thoughts/feelings.
Self-Regulation	Samatva & Vairagya (Equanimity & Non-attachment)	Maintaining cognitive balance amidst dualities (gain/loss, success/failure) as taught in the Gita.
Empathy	Karuna & Sarva-Bhuta-Hita (Universal Compassion)	Recognizing the shared Atman across all living beings, fostering deep interpersonal connection.
Social Skills	Dharma & Loka-Samgraha (Social Cohesion)	Conducting actions to maintain societal harmony, ethical governance, and constructive relationships.
Intrinsic Motivation	Nishkama Karma (Selfless Action)	Engaging in purposeful action for internal values/duty rather than external rewards or outcome anxiety.

Vol. 12 Issue 6s (October, 2026)
ISSN:2208-2190 Pages- 192-196
DOI: https://doi.org/10.69980/7qvptd32

4. DISCUSSION & MODERN SYNTHESIS

4.1 Parallels with Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT)

A striking theoretical convergence exists between ancient Indian emotional governance and contemporary Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT). CBT posits that emotional distress stems from cognitive distortions and irrational beliefs. Similarly, the Upanishads and the Gita argue that suffering arises from Ajnana (ignorance of one's true nature) and excessive attachment (Sanga) to fleeting outcomes. The practice of Nishkama Karma acts as a potent cognitive restructuring technique, redirecting cognitive bandwidth from anticipatory anxiety to task-focused execution.

4.2 Practical Applications in Leadership and Executive Resilience

Modern executive environments are characterized by volatility, uncertainty, complexity, and ambiguity (VUCA). Leaders who cultivate Samatva (equanimity) are better equipped to remain composed during organizational crises, make unbiased decisions, and avoid emotional burnout. Furthermore, the Gita's principle of Loka-Samgraha (acting for the welfare of the world) provides an ethical cornerstone for Authentic Leadership and Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR).

4.3 Pedagogical Integration in Education

In educational settings, incorporating Eastern practices such as Sakshi meditation and reflective self-inquiry enhances students' emotional self-regulation, focus, and empathetic engagement. Rather than viewing education strictly through the lens of intellectual acquisition, synthesizing ancient emotional wisdom supports holistic character formation and mental well-being.

5. CHALLENGES & FUTURE RESEARCH DIRECTIONS

While the theoretical synthesis of ancient wisdom and modern psychology offers profound benefits, several challenges must be addressed in future scholarship:

1. Cultural Hermeneutics: Ensuring that ancient concepts are not inappropriately decontextualized or stripped of their ethical and philosophical foundations when adapted into Western frameworks.
2. Empirical Measurement: Developing validated psychometric scales specifically designed to measure constructs such as Sakshi awareness, Samatva, and Nishkama Karma orientation in organizational settings.
3. Longitudinal Interventions: Conducting empirical studies to evaluate the long-term impact of Gita-based emotional regulation interventions on executive stress reduction and workplace flourishing.

6. CONCLUSION

This study demonstrates that the ancient Indian scriptures—the Vedas, Upanishads, and Bhagavad Gita—offer a sophisticated, highly integrative model of Emotional Intelligence that complements and enriches contemporary psychological science. By bridging the secular-cognitive framework of modern psychology with the holistic, contemplative depth of Eastern philosophy, researchers and practitioners gain access to a timeless blueprint for emotional governance, resilience, and human flourishing. Synthesizing ancient wisdom with the modern mind not only expands the horizons of transcultural psychology but also equips contemporary society with the emotional tools necessary to navigate the complexities of the 21st century.

References

1. Algeo, J. (2000). The Bhagavad-Gita: A Study Course. Department of Education, Theosophical Society in America.
2. Ashkanasy, N. M. (2003). Emotions in Organizations: A Multilevel Perspective. Research in Multi-Level Issues, 2, 9–54.
3. Bar-On, R. (2006). The Bar-On Model of Emotional-Social Intelligence (ESI). Psicothema, 18, 13–25.
4. Boyatzis, R. E., Goleman, D., & Rhee, K. (2000). Clustering competence in emotional intelligence: Insights from the Emotional Competence Inventory (ECI). Handbook of Emotional Intelligence, 343–362.
5. Easwaran, E. (1985). The Bhagavad Gita. Tomales, CA: Nilgiri Press.
6. Goleman, D. (1995). Emotional Intelligence: Why It Can Matter More Than IQ. New York: Bantam Books.
7. Goleman, D. (1998). Working with Emotional Intelligence. New York: Bantam Books.
8. Jeste, D. V., & Vahia, I. V. (2008). Comparison of the Conceptualization of Wisdom in Ancient Indian Literature with Modern Views: Focus on the Bhagavad Gita. Psychiatry, 71(3), 197–209.
9. Mayer, J. D., Salovey, P., & Caruso, D. R. (2004). Emotional Intelligence: Theory, Findings, and Implications. Psychological Inquiry, 15(3), 197–215.

Vol. 12 Issue 6s (October, 2026)
ISSN:2208-2190 Pages- 192-196
DOI: https://doi.org/10.69980/7qvptd32

10. Salovey, P., & Mayer, J. D. (1990). Emotional Intelligence. Imagination, Cognition and Personality, 9(3), 185–211.
11. Sharma, R. (2012). Measuring Social and Emotional Intelligence Competencies in the Indian Context. Cross Cultural Management: An International Journal, 19(1), 30–47.
12. Sharma, S., Deller, J., Biswal, R., & Mandal, M. K. (2009). Emotional Intelligence: Factorial Structure and Construct Validity Across Cultures. International Journal of Cross Cultural Management, 9(2), 217–236.
13. Srivastava, A. K., Sibia, A., & Misra, G. (2008). Research on Emotional Intelligence: The Indian Experience. Theoretical and Cultural Perspectives, Nova Science Publishers.
14. Swami Swarupananda. (1996). Srimad Bhagavad Gita. Kolkata: Advaita Ashrama.